

FUND MANAGEMENT COMMENT

October once again lived up to its reputation as a month in which equities are susceptible to corrections. Initially sparked by higher US interest rates, investors' various concerns culminated in substantial falls in international equity prices as well as other risky assets. While US equity markets had previously emerged unscathed for the most part, they too were dragged down by the largest correction in some time in technology and growth stocks, which had previously been performing strongly. A significant proportion of international equity indices have now dropped below their 200-day lines. Investors were starting to fret that a global economic downswing might emerge sooner than expected. There was a modest slowdown on the US labour market and in retail sales. However, following moderate corrections the key leading indicators held up at a very robust level overall. For its part, US consumer confidence actually climbed again from its already high level. Meanwhile, economic indicators in the Eurozone were more or less unchanged. The trend in order intake in German industry was surprisingly robust, with new orders up 2% versus the previous month.

In view of what have been jittery equity markets of late, rate hike expectations for the US were lowered slightly. However, there is still no doubt about the fundamental trajectory of rising interest rates. Meanwhile the ECB left key rates and its outlook unchanged. The central bankers postponed a decision on bringing bond purchases to an end until December. European bond markets consolidated in the first half of the month before subsequently benefiting from the mounting uncertainty via safe haven inflows.

In Europe, the broad-based STOXX 600 index was down by 5.5%. The Asia Pacific ex Japan region turned in the worst performance, shedding 8%. In Europe, small caps lost 7.1%, significantly underperforming the index heavyweights. Defensive sectors such as pharmaceuticals, telecoms and food produced a more robust performance than the industrials, technology and banking segments. Overall, almost all risky asset classes ended the month in negative territory.

First Private Euro Dividenden STAUFER B ended the reporting month down 7.52%. Its benchmark, the Euro Stoxx 50 (TR index), shed 5.87% last month.

OBJECTIVE

The proven fund strategy produces a diversified, return-oriented, high-quality selection of European stocks with reasonable valuations. Context of company earnings and robust high dividend yields form the basis of a sustainable investment success for investors with a longer-term horizon.

STRATEGY

The fund generally invests in the most promising stocks of the Eurozone's highest and most stable dividend-paying equities, based on the EURO STOXX equity index. The 30-50 stocks selected on this basis are more or less equally weighted, and care is taken to ensure that country and sector allocations are balanced. The composition of the portfolio is reviewed and optimised on a regular basis.
